Law Library Expansion

Tempe, Arizona

アリゾナ州立大学法学部図書館
アリゾナ州テンペ、アリゾナ州立大学

Project title: Arizona State University College of Law Library
Site: Arizona State University, Tempe, Arizona
Expected date of completion: Spring 1993
Client: Arizona State University

Program: A law library, renovation and expansion

Concept: The Arizona desert landscape provokes mis-readings. Plants look like animals, animals look like rocks, rocks look like animals, plants look like rocks, animals look like plants . . . eye foolers. The sun bursts over the horizon not bothering with some filtering effect of cast coast greenery, but immediately filling an enormous sky with incredible light. Textures and colors vibrate. On the ground plane and along the horizon, every form takes on a hyperness, incredibly legible and overly important.

The site of the law library expansion is on the fringe of the Arizona State University orthogonally planned campus. The Arizona landscape, the curve of the east property line, the geometrical determinism of the existing law school building and a number of other buildings scattered at the campus fringe communicate permission for exuberant form-making. The dynamic forms of the proposed law library building both contrast and complement the existing building, Armstrong Hall. When seen together, neither building is dominant over the other; the two are harmonious unconventionalities, forming a College of Law campus within the greater university campus. The forms/spaces of the scheme are organized over and around the distinct functions of the library: technical services, circulation services, the core collection and the other discrete collections. An "oasis-like" plaza mediates between the existing building and the new building. The portion of the site south of the building will be "desert-like" with "magic mountain" on the north-south axis with the dome of the core collection and on the east-west axis with Lemon Street and the business school building beyond the playing fields. The building's structure is steel frame on concrete foundations. Exterior materials include synthetic stucco, metal roofing and insulating glazing. Interior materials include concrete paint on gypsum wall board and carpet.
