Stoneham, Maine

Architect: Scogin Elam & Bray
Architects, Inc.

On a wooded pondside site in Maine, the architects designed a house partly raised on pilotis that sits lightly on the land. With a focus that is both outward and inward, it opens toward the landscape, while wrapping around a glazed lightwell that allows views from one interior space to another. The materials tend to be luminous yet discrete, including cementitious fiberboard and zinc cladding, concrete floors, and wood and aluminum window frames.
